MEDICAL EMERGENCY IN DENTAL SURGERY

Medical emergencies were most likely to occur during and after local anesthesia, primarily during tooth extraction and endodontics. Over 60% of the emergencies were syncope, with hyperventilation the next most frequent at 7%.

The extent of treatment by the dentist requires preparation, prevention and then management, as necessary. Prevention is accomplished by conducting a thorough medical history with appropriate alterations to dental treatment as required. The most important aspect of nearly all medical emergencies in the dental office is to prevent, or correct, insufficient oxygenation of the brain and heart. Therefore, the management of all medical emergencies should include ensuring that oxygenated blood is being delivered to these critical organs. This is consistent with basic cardiopulmonary resuscitation, with which the dentist must be competent. This provides the skills to manage most medical emergencies, which begin with the assessment, and if necessary the treatment of airway, breathing and circulation (the ABCs of CPR). Usually, only after these ABCs are addressed should the dentist consider the use of emergency drugs.

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY-BASICS

DAY 1- IMPORTANCE OF HEALTHCARE RESEARCH

Research in common parlance refers to a search for knowledge. Research is an academic activity and as such the term should be used in a technical sense. The search for knowledge through objective and systematic method of finding solution to a problem is research. The purpose of research is to discover answers to questions through the application of scientific procedures. The main aim of research is to find out the truth which is hidden and which has not been discovered as yet. Yet another way of classifying health research, be it empirical or theoretical, basic or applied, is to describe it under three operational interlinked categories of biomedical, health services and behavioural research, the so-called health research triangle. Biomedical research deals primarily with basic research involving processes at the cellular level; health research deals with issues in the environment surrounding man, which promote changes at the cellular level; and behavioural research deals with the interaction of man and the environment in a manner reflecting the beliefs, attitudes and practices of the individual in society.

Day-2: Formulation of Hypothesis

Hypotheses are carefully constructed statements about a phenomenon in the population. The hypotheses may have been generated by deductive reasoning, or based on inductive reasoning from prior observations. One of the most useful tools of health research is the generation of hypotheses which, when tested, will lead to the identification of the most likely causes of disease or changes in the condition being observed. Although we cannot draw definite conclusions, or claim proof using the inductive method, we can come ever closer to the truth by knocking down existing hypotheses and replacing them with ones of greater plausibility. In health research, hypotheses are often constructed and tested to identify causes of disease and
